NAC&U 2017 Summer Institute Will Address Difficult Dialogues on Campus

This year's Summer Institute, to be held June 21 - 23, 2017, at Valparaiso University in Indiana, will give NAC&U members a multi-day opportunity to discuss and hear from experts on 'Dialogue and Understanding: Conversations Across Difference.' The Summer Institute will host keynote speakers and also draw on the expertise within the consortium to share best practices for supporting civil dialogue on difficult subjects in our classrooms and on our campuses. The format of the Summer Institute will be different this year to maximize small group discussions but the outcome will stay the same - campus teams will be able to return to their home institutions with strategies that they can put into practice. The Sage Colleges Announces New President

Christopher Ames, Ph.D., provost of Shepherd University in Shepherdstown, West Virginia, longtime literature professor, and published author, will become the tenth president of The Sage Colleges on July 1, 2017.

"I am a firm believer in liberal education, but I do not believe that the liberal arts should be sequestered into one world while professional programs are housed in another," Ames said. "If we believe in the power of broad liberal education, we believe in having liberally educated nurses, accountants, therapists, and managers, as well as professionally prepared artists, designers and social scientists. Sage has been dedicated to pragmatic liberal education from its founding, and I am convinced those values will inform the institutions that thrive in the century ahead."

University of Evansville Takes Creative Approach to Promoting Service Trip

The Office of Study Abroad at the University of Evansville issued a unique construction challenge to UE civil engineering professor Mark Valenzuela. Build a birdhouse in one hour with no plans and no materials - except for whatever wood, instructions, and tools can be "won" for him by participants in a trivia contest.

The activity was designed to bring awareness to a study abroad program that will enable students to travel to Nicaragua to work with Habitat for Humanity on building a home for a family in need.

Dr. Valenzuela began with no materials, no safety equipment, and no instructions. Holly Carter, UE's Director of Education Abroad, served as the MC and asked the crowd trivia questions about Nicaragua (where the team of students will go to build a house for a family through Habitat for Humanity) and every time the crowd answered correctly, he received a tool or piece of information to finish the birdhouse, although some of the items received were in jest, such as the giant blow-up hammer.
